apartheid in South Africa, toured the temples of India and takes regular snowboarding trips to the Rockies. And that's just a few of his many adventures. Then several months ago, Dave's life took a jolt when he was diagnosed with multiple sclerosis. It was devastating news, especially for someone so active. But rather than be discouraged, he researched the disease. He vowed to not let it slow him down. And he decided to help others in the same situation by starting a not-for-profit organization called ActiveMSers.org, which encourages people with the disease to stay active and not lose hope. The site includes outdoor gear reviews, exercise advice and travel tips. In the future, he plans to expand ActiveMSers into a grassroots network of sports and activity clubs throughout the country, helping to connect fellow MSers with their active passions.
